Our doctors share their experiences in Scandinavia:

Mihai Dinu

Mihai is a psychiatrist who lives in Östersund. He moved to Sweden in February 2013, together with his wife, economist and their daughter. The whole family studied Swedish in Spain, with the MediCarrera project.

Testimonial

The language training was difficult, but at the same time it was a fun experience. The teachers have a lot of experience in teaching Swedish to foreign doctors. The best part of moving was that our family has brighter prospects now, than they had in Romania. I think that in the future we will feel at home in Sweden. Of course, it's hard to leave your family and friends, but we try to stay close by using Skype and Messenger. The most important thing has been that our daughter has found a better environment to grow up in. She can be out in nature a lot and it's a calm and safe society to grow up in.

I was happy with the introduction to the workplace - it worked out very well. After two or three months I had my first patients. It was a bit difficult at first to understand the dialect that the patients were speaking and I was very tired when I returned home in the evenings. But with some practice and a strong focus on the language it started going better and now, after half a year in Sweden, I understand almost everything and I can have a dialogue with the patients without difficulties.
